How property investor helps to rebuild faces

by TOM FOOT

ON a hot and dusty day 25 years ago in the poverty-stricken capital city of Ethiopia, Jonathan Crown came face to face with a young street beggar wearing a veil.

As a resident of Hampstead and owner of a property investment firm, Mr Crown was at the other end of the social spectrum.

When he returned to London he set up a charity, Project Harar, based in South End Green, Hampstead, which pays for surgeons, doctors and nurses to fly to Ethiopia to carry out facial disfigurement operations.

They treat conditions that affect eating, drinking, breathing and that affect eating, drinking, breathing and facial disfigurement. They treat conditions that affect eating, drinking, breathing and that affect eating, drinking, breathing and facial disfigurement.

Professor Hanna led a team of 20 colleagues, family and friends in the recent 10k race which ended in St James’s Park.

The charity helps people with different forms of neuromuscular diseases including motor neuron disease, Charcot-Marie-Tooth disease (CMT), muscular dystrophy, channelopathies, myasthenia gravis and mitochondrial diseases.

Professor Hanna said the charity helped his team with “vital work to develop new treatments for our patients”.

The charity's director, Victoria Clare, said: “We’re thrilled to be working towards our biggest year yet for the number of patients we’ll treat. It’s wonderful to know that our great junior doctors, nurses and surgeons will be providing training to improve care in the hospitals once we leave. Without this vital training our work wouldn’t be able to go so far.”
